Descriptif	The course proposes an analysis of the origin and evolution of the modern world order from its early beginnings to the contemporary post-Cold War world. I will have a look on the major stages of this evolution with the view of enabling you as students to have an in-depth knowledge of long-term trends and processes at the roots of current world affairs. The analysis proposed is necessarily a personal – although not an arbitrary – one. As such, it is open to discussion and debate. You are welcome to interrupt me to ask questions, make remarks, put forward criticisms. I do not ask you to agree with my it. Of course not. What I want is that you know my theses before criticizing them – this is the condition of a scientific or academic debate or controversy, given that social sciences, and therefore IR, are plural fields composed by competing paradigms.
