Descriptif	This course aims to provide students with an overview of the shape and organization of the global economy today. It offers a survey of current global trends supplying their historical background and tackling the interpretations put forward by economists to explain their significance. It examines the economic situation among the various players of the international economy by focusing on different countries and regions and show how they have become interdependent. Teaching and class discussions will be feed by recent in-depth summaries supplied by the Economist magazine which will be made available via the intranet (moodle). In addition students will be requested to offer one short presentation (<15mn) during term on the economic situation of a country of their choice but of particular relevance to the present theme (pre-arranged with the instructor). In addition, all students are encouraged to submit a term paper which entitles them to double their ECTS credit; the recommended format is 3,000 words (6-7 pages) and the topic has to be agreed on by the instructor.
