Descriptif	The main aim of this lecture is to familiarize students with the fundamental trends at work in the contemporary global economy. The major characteristic being the US-China rivalry, the sessions will focus on each country's macroeconomic features, how they interact, how this interaction shapes global patterns in production, trade, finance, money, and how these patterns shape hegemonic struggles between the two superpowers. Thereby, this lecture tackles the burning issues of global affairs such as trade wars, financial sanctions, technological battles, the Belt and Road Initiative, Renminbi internationalization and US dollar supremacy, shifts in supply chains, the arms race in the Indopacific...
