

State and government in Africa

Presentation

This course is an introduction to the study of politics in Africa, via an exploration of the forms of State embodiment, of the modes of government, and of the actors and institutions involved therein. It introduces multi-disciplinarity in the study of politics: one of the main contributions of African studies is to associate political science with history, anthropology and sociology of development. Two main approaches are combined. First, the historical approach, through which pre-colonial, colonial and post-colonial Africa will be discussed. Secondly, the sociological approach, which consists of examining the modes of government in Africa; government in which a wide range of actors participate - in partnership but also often in competition with the State. Thus, the objective of this course is to address two fundamental concepts of political science, "the State" and "government", and to understand in what way they are useful for gaining a better understanding of politics in Africa.

Recommended Prerequisite(s)

Formule pédagogique

The course uses three pedagogical approaches: as a lecture, it is based on formal presentations during which you will be encouraged to ask your questions; it is also based, on your active preparation prior to lectures, via the consultation of documents accessible on the learning platform (Moodle); finally, personal reading efforts are an integral part of the course. This course will use archives, maps or even extracts from documentary films, which will help you to understand the ways in which power is exercised over the long term, and to show how they are intertwined.
