

International Interventions in Africa

Descriptif

International interventions in Africa offer rich insights on important issues in international politics: threats to international peace and security, humanitarian crises, armed conflicts prevention and management. Beyond these particular crises, international interventions reflect changing power relations among states at the global scale. They also reveal complex forms of political decision-making and social monitoring, involving a diversity of actors: politicians, national and international bureaucrats, diplomats, militaries, rebels, investors, business(wo)men, consultants, activists, scientists, artists, journalists, etc. The multidimensional interactions these actors entertain locally or in faraway headquarters are even blurring the divide between the intervenors on one side and local actors and host governments on the other.
