

Thinking social action

Presentation

Following a broad examination of the classic literature in political philosophy and anthropology, and in continuation with the first part of the class delivered in the first semester on the theme "Powers and Societies", the class focuses on the interpretations by the main political science authors of the 20th and 21st centuries. In this respect, the class provides an opportunity for students to capitalize on the knowledge acquired in previous political science classes and through their own reading and personal work. The theme we will focus on more specifically is: "Thinking social action".
